Text A

- The English Constitution—that indescribable entity—is a living
- thing, growing with the growth of men, and assuming ever-varying
- forms in accordance with the subtle and complex laws of human
- character. It is the child of wisdom and chance. The wise men of 1688
- moulded it into the shape we know, but the chance that George I
- could not speak English gave it one of its essential peculiarities—the
- system of a Cabinet independent of the Crown and subordinate to the
- Prime Minister. The wisdom of Lord Grey saved it from petrifaction
- and destruction, and set it upon the path of Democracy. Then chance
- intervened once more; a female sovereign happened to marry an able
- and pertinacious man; and it seemed likely that an element which had
- been quiescent within it for years—the element of irresponsible
- administrative power—was about to become its predominant
- characteristic and to change completely the direction of its growth.
- But what chance gave chance took away. The Consort perished in his
- prime; and the English Constitution, dropping the dead limb with
- hardly a tremor, continued its mysterious life as if he had never
- been.

₁ Text C

- 2 The Chamber of the House
- 3 The present Chamber of the House of Commons was designed by the late Sir Giles
- 4 Gilbert Scott and was opened in 1950. It replaced the Chamber designed by Sir
- 5 Charles Barry, first used by the Commons in 1852, and destroyed by German
- 6 bombing in 1941. The Commons acquired their first permanent home in 1547, when
- ⁷ St Stephen's Chapel was made available. It was used by the House until 1834, when it
- was destroyed by the fire which ravaged almost the whole Palace of Westminster.
- 5 The lower chapel of St Stephen's survived the fire, and is now known as the 'Crypt
- Chapel'. St Stephen's Hall, through which visitors approach the Central Lobby, is on
- the same site and is the same size as the old Chamber.
- In its shape and size the present Chamber is almost a replica of Barry's, though its
- decoration is less ornate, and larger galleries have been provided for visitors. The
- general seating arrangements of the House are in effect merely an enlargement of
- those in use over four hundred years ago in St Stephen's Chapel, when Members sat
- in the choir stalls, and the Speaker's Chair stood on the altar steps. There are 650
- 17 Members of Parliament; but there is seating accommodation (including the side
- galleries) for only 437. This restriction is deliberate: the House is not a forum for set
- orations; its debates are largely conversational in character; and for many of them —
- 20 highly specialized in theme, or of a routine nature few Members are present,
- 21 many others being engaged on other Parliamentary duties in the Palace of
- Westminster. Thus, a small and intimate Chamber is more convenient. Conversely,
- on great occasions, when the House is full and Members have to sit in the gangways,
- or cluster round the Speaker's Chair, at the Bar and in the side galleries, the drama of
- ²⁵ Parliament is enhanced, and there is, as Sir Winston Churchill once put it, 'a sense of
- 26 crowd and urgency'.
