

Malinowski: Context of Situation

Let us have a look at such a text, an actual utterance taken down from a conversation of natives in the Trobrand Islands, N E New Guinea In analysing it, we shall see quite plainly how helpless one is in attempting to open up the meaning of a statement by mere linguistic means, and we shall also be able to realize what sort of additional knowledge, besides verbal equivalence, is necessary in order to make the utterance significant.

I adduce a statement in native, giving under each word its nearest English equivalent.

> Tasakaulo kaymatana yakıda; We run front-wood ourselves;

SUPPLEMENT I

tasivıla tawoulo tagine ovanu; we paddle in place; we see we turn ısakaulo ka'u'uya soda; companion ours; he runs rear-wood oluvieki Pılolu simılaveta behind Pılolu their sea-arm

The verbatim English translation of this utterance sounds at first like a riddle or a meaningless jumble of words; certainly not like a significant, unambiguous statement. Now if the listener, whom we suppose acquainted with the language, but unacquainted with the culture of the natives, were to understand even the general trend of this statement, he would have first to be informed about the situation in which these words were spoken. He would need to have them placed in their proper setting of native culture.
